EAT in the form of steam has been and still is the greatest factor in the development of all lines of industry which require more power than is available from human labor. Practically all the power employed by the civilized world is supplied by the steam engine--it has freed the galley slave from his labors at the oars, it has relieved the horse from the work of drawing the street car, in short it has made possible all our modern methods of production and transportation. Before the railway train, no one thought of that great industry, the express business, which, starting in 1839, grew in two decades in importance represented by a capital of over thirty millions and which today with a capital of over seventy millions operates on over 200, 000 miles of steam and electric railroads. The steam engine has made possible the subway car, the elevated train, and the electric light, for, contrary to a rather popular impression, electricity is...
