Excerpt: . . the generic title for the typical lizards. Again, from p. 17 he would be led to suppose that Gastropoda is the generic term for snails, and that these rank in classificatory value with the viviparous pond-snail (Paludina vivipara). Careful study of the text may in some cases put matters right, but the muddle is as bad as bad can be for beginners. The address on morphology generally, its modern tendencies and progress, and its relation to other sciences, delivered by Prof. A. Giard before the Congress of Sciences and Art at the St. Louis Exhibition in September last, is published in the Revue Scintifique of February 4 and 11. After referring to the revolution in biology effected, first by Lamarck and subsequently by Darwin, the author proceeds to sketch the gradual evolution of modern biological conceptions and theories, dwelling especially on Wolffs hypothesis of epigenesis. Reference is then made to the importance of the study of variation, both among living and extinct types, after which the author passes on to review the influence that palaeontology has exerted on biology and the doctrine of evolution. Abiogenesis next claims attention, while the author concludes his discourse by reference to some of the evils attendant on the extreme specialisation of scientific work at the present day. It is time, he urges, that a general organisation to direct scientific work should replace the present state of anarchy, whereby much energy that is now practically wasted would be diverted towards the attainment of...
