The Eidograph, which is represented in the accompanying engraving, (Fig. 85,) is a far superior instrument to the pantagraph, being more exact in its work, and not so limited as regards ratio of reduction. The point of support when the instrument is at work is a heavy weight shown at H, from the under side of which three or four projecting needle points fix the instrument firmly to the drawing paper. Springing from this weight is a short standard or fulcrum, attached to a sliding-box, K, in which slides the centre beam, C, and to any part of which it may be clamped by means of a clamping screw. At the ends of the central beam are two pulley wheels, JJ, the centre pins of which revolve in sockets at the ends of the beam. Two steel bands,...
