The earth seems to be glad and rejoice, whilst man congratulates it on its Tenewed vigour and renovated appearance. There is something cheerful, hopeful and agreeable in spring; agreeable, because Nature has put off her winter gloom, and is now wearing a more lightsome aspect. Hopeful, because the vegetable earth is preparing produce, and affording prospect of abundant reward to the husbandman. How anxiously the cottager walks round his garden to see if the plants are thriving, or the flowers appearing, --if the rose trees are budding, or the fruit trees are blossoming; with what pleasure does he perceive their different growths, expansions, and unfoldings. We will now pass on from Spring to Midsummer, which commences in June. On the 21st of this month the sun arrives at the Summer solstice, when...
